Intelligently Organized Open Source Software

Open Source

With Open Source software, the code can be copied, modified, or deleted by other users and organizations. As the software is open to the public, the result is that it constantly updates, improves and expands as more people work on its enhancements.

Closed Source

Only the original authors of software can access, copy, and alter that software. In a case with closed source software, you are not purchasing the software, but only pay to use it.
